C. M. Fittz, a Traveling Man, Ended His Existence with Poison.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. LAFAYETTE, Ind., Aug. 20 .- Brooding over an illspent past, and looking with fear upon an unpromising future, C. M. Fittz, a traveling man, sought a lonely spot on the bank of the Wabash river last night, took some form of poison and resigned himself to the workings of the draught upon his system. His dead body, lying face downward on the muddy bank in one of the wildest places along the river, was found early this morning by fishermen.

Fittz claimed that his parents were worth seven millions of dollars, and that he had been banished from the family because he was a drunkard. His home was in Washington Court House, O., and a notebook contains the address of E. V. Donnan, 222 N. North street, Washington Court House. Fittz was drinking heavily yesterday and last evening he hired a boat, saying that be would take an hour's row on the river. Not long afterwards he told others that he was going down the river, and that it would be his farewell trip. In the boat there were several bottles of beer. One of these was in the mud near where the body lay. The boat, without the oars, was far down the river. The O'Connor brothers, who have found every dead body in the past half century, continued their service by turning up the body of Fittz. Coroner Morrison was notified, and the remains, after several hours' work, were brought to the city.

Mrs. Frances Stafford, of 243 E. 114th St., N.Y. City, adds her testimony to the hundreds of thousands on Mrs. Pinkham's files.

When Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies were first introduced skeptics all over the country frowned upon their curative claims, but as year after year has rolled by and the little group of women who had been cured by the new discovery has since grown into a vast army of hundreds of thousands, doubts and skepticisms have been swept away as by a mighty flood, until to-day the great good that Lydia E Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her other medicines are doing among the women of America is attracting the attention of many of our leading scientists, physicians
